Rice's Asian Studies program, and the Transnational Asian Studies department, focuses on transnational, transhistoric, diasporic, and global movements of peoples and cultures of Asia. This unique course of study forms the undergraduate major in Asian Studies, allowing students to select between two distinct major concentrations. The major concentration in Transnational Asian Studies emphasizes independent undergraduate research on Asia, using either social scientific or humanistic methods, while the major concentration in Asian Language emphasizes fluency in an Asian language at an advanced level, as indicated by the ability to understand, converse, read and write in that language. Both major concentrations develop Asian cultural literacy and interactional and intercultural abilities and knowledge. Additionally, the department offers a minor in Asian Studies.
